"Concealment and Exposure" by Thomas Nagel - nyu.edu

Concealment includes not only secrecy and deception, but also reticence and nonacknowledgment. There is much more going on inside us all the time than we are willing to express, and civilization would be impossible if we could all read each other's minds. Apart from everything else there is the sheer chaotic tropical luxuriance of the inner life. To quote Simmel: "All we communicate to another. Concealment and Exposure: And Other Essays by Thomas Nagel

In his essay "Concealment and Exposure," Thomas Nagel argues that we have come to include too much in the public sphere, and that it is necessary to return to a notion of more reticence in public (that is, more privacy).
