Field experiments in economics: The past, the present, and ...

The third distinct period of field experimentation is the most recent surge of field experiments in economics (see Harrison and List, 2004; List, 2006; List and Reiley, 2007 for recent overviews). Like social experiments (but unlike the first-generation agricultural studies), the most recent field experiments apply randomization to human subjects to obtain identification. In contrast to social

ELICITING RISK AND TIME PREFERENCES USING FIELD ...

The field experiments utilize field sampling designs that we developed, and procedures that were chosen to be relatively transparent in the field with non-standard subject pools. Our overall design was also intended to be a general template for such field experiments in other countries. We examine the characterization of risk over a wider domain for each subject than previous experiments.
